

Bellevue HOV Access Ramp

As part of the Bellevue HOV Access Project (Access Downtown), Sound Transit built a bus and carpool ramp that provides direct access from the Bellevue Transit Center onto Interstate 405. This helps buses maintain fast, reliable service and improves freeway conditions by reducing the number of buses weaving across lanes.

Bellevue Rider Services Building

The Rider Services Building is adjacent to the Bellevue Transit Center. Several rider amenities are available including transit schedules and other rider information, public phones, community information, bike racks and public restrooms. The building also houses a station for the Bellevue City Police.

Windswept

High Road

Public Art

Two landmark sculptures are featured at Bellevue Transit Center.

High Road is a sculpture located adjacent to the rider services building. Artist team Stuart Keeler and Michael Machnic researched how stilts were used as entertainment, transportation and in rituals. Eggs are often viewed as a symbol of mathematical perfection, new beginnings and life. Together these elements reflect Bellevue's agricultural past while showing regard to the earth by touching it as minimally as possible.

Windswept is a sculpture by Barbara Grygutis that sits on an elevated marble platform at the northwest corner of the transit center. The piece is inspired by the shape of an old tree exposed to decades of wind. Special LEDs light the sculpture internally. These programmable lights give Windswept its dynamic, kinetic quality.
